Life at Green Grove Cohousing

Most neighborhoods are just a collection of houses. Green Grove is a place where people actually know one another.

Neighbors stop to talk on the path. People share meals and garden harvests, gather for game nights, bluegrass jams, and outdoor movies on the green — retirees, couples, families, and kids alike. The result is a place that feels connected and lived-in, not just a set of addresses.

The neighborhood sits on five green acres at the edge of Forest Grove, with gardens, fruit trees, and open fields all around — woods and farmland just beyond. The homes face a shared green instead of the street, along a quiet, walkable loop.

Shared stewardship. Residents pitch in differently — tending the gardens and chickens, fixing things in the workshop, hosting gatherings, welcoming guests. Together it keeps both the property and the community alive.

Shared Spaces

The Common House anchors daily life — shared dinners, meetings, celebrations, guest rooms for visiting family, and an art studio downstairs.

The Home

This detached three-bedroom, two-bath home was built for privacy and comfort without giving up connection. Big windows pull in light all day, with Mt. Hood framed from the living room and the wide covered porch.

The kitchen is the heart of it — an induction range, deep quartz counters, cabinets and pull-outs for everything, and a window that looks across open fields and forest while you cook.
